COONABARABRAN - ASTRONOMY CAPITAL OF AUSTRALIA ... WHERE THE WARRUMBUNGLE MOUNTAINS REACH THE STARS

Warrumbungle Shire proclaimed

FACE OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT CHANGES AFTER 98 YEARS

Coonabarabran and Coolah Shires, both proclaimed in 1906, ceased existence yesterday morning, when the NSW Government finalised the creation of a new local government area known as Warrumbungle Shire.

The change, the latest step in the NSW Government's structural re-form of local government, includes the entire areas of the former Coonabarabran and Coolah Shires.

Former general manager of Coonabarabran Shire Council, Bob Geraghty, indicated to the Times that this proclamation means that an area identified by Gunnedah Shire Council for a possible boundary change stays in the new local government area.

Likewise, Dumedoo remains a part of the new shire.

Any further moves to alter the boundaries would need to be taken back to the NSW Local Government Boundaries Commission.

Current works programs of both Coonabarabran and Coolah councils are not expected to be affected.

Minister for Local Government, Tony Kelly, said that there are now 153 councils in NSW, down from 172 councils in March last year.

"The latest move represents a voluntary amalgamation of Coolah and Coonabarabran Shires," said Mr. Kelly, who added the creation of the new council has a number of advantages identified by the councils, including:

- * An improved ability to control and manage increasing pressure on the built and natural environments;
- * A better system of natural resource management;
- * The development of strategic planning systems to improve management of infrastructure;
- * Increasing the shire's economic potential; and
- * A reduction in costs of existing operations.

Mr. Kelly congratulated the councils and the community for their leadership and their commitment to improved services for residents and ratepayers.

The Boundaries Commission also examined the possible inclusion of Gulgandra Shire in the new Warrumbungle Shire. However, the proclamation includes only those councils which supported a voluntary amalgamation.

Mr. Kelly encouraged councils to work together in the spirit of mutual co-operation and with a clear focus on improving services to their communities.

Former Coolah Shire mayor, Bruce Rindfleisch, has been appointed as the interim mayor of the new shire, and former Coonabarabran Shire general manager, Bob Geraghty, as acting general manager.

Former Coonabarabran Shire mayor, Peter Shinton, is deputy administrator.

The proclamation, which follows an examination by the Boundaries Commission in June, makes the date for elections in the new area at 5 March, 2005. It is expected that an election of nine councillors will take place.

Mr. Kelly said the Boundaries Commission found that the proposal would create a financially stronger council.

"Financially stronger councils can deliver services more efficiently and equitably to their residents and ratepayers," Mr. Kelly said.

"Our local government reform program is all about making sure that councils in NSW can better provide services to their communities."

The proclamation also alters the boundaries of the Mid-Western Regional local government area to transfer the township of Cassilis to the Upper Hunter Shire.

The transfer flows from other changes to local government areas in the region made earlier this year.

Above and below: Acting general manager of the new Warrumbungle Shire, Bob Geraghty, addresses indoor and outdoor staff for the last time as Coonabarabran Shire general manager. The combined meeting, possibly the first and certainly the last of its kind for Coonabarabran Shire Council, was held on Monday afternoon to outline procedures following the expected proclamation, which was announced yesterday morning.
